

Joseph H. Banks IV, Board of Directors

Joe Banks was born and raised in the Phoenix area and has one younger brother. He graduated from Gerard Catholic High school in 1989 and is continuing his education at Gateway Community College and ASU in construction management and business finance.

Joe has worked in construction for 17 years with his focus primarily in the structural steel fabrication and erection industry. He is currently the Deputy Assistant of Operations for Ironco Enterprises, LLC and responsible for day-to-day coordination and management of project management, field and production operations. He is also responsible for the development and management of the company's pre construction services division, which is where his passion lies. He believes there is nothing more rewarding than being involved in the development of a project from its conception to reality. In addition, Joe is a member of the Alliance for Construction Excellence and serves on the design assist task force committee.

As a boy, Joe spent many summers working and playing at his aunt and uncles ranch in Williams, Arizona. This is where he developed his love for animals and the outdoors. It was also where he first realized the powerful connection between horses and humans. His hobbies revolve around his love for the ocean and include saltwater fishing and scuba diving.

Mr. Banks considers it to be an honor and a privilege to serve as a member of the Board of Directors for Horses Help and be part of an organization filled with passionate and caring staff, volunteers, and contributors and of course, HORSES.
